

Biography

Gibby Waitzkin is a fiber artist, papermaker and photographer. Her education and training focused on photography, printmaking, and arts education.

Her early involvement with political activism in the 60's centered around civil rights, and environmental issues- what we eat, drink and breathe. She was an original organics /sustainable advocate- struck by the industrialization of our world, in particular, in agriculture.

She lived in Washington, DC and worked for over thirty-five years using her arts and design background on environmental, women's rights and arts issues. Gibby also founded Gibson Creative, an award-winning design and communications studio in Washington, D.C. Her work included campaigns for the World Wildlife Fund's Climate Campaign; Gore for President 2000 identity, Pew Center on Climate Change.

Her family bought property in the 70's in Floyd, Virginia, where she and her husband built a home, and where she now splits her time between Floyd and Hillsborough, NC, where her her husband works at Duke University. She is committed to living a life built around an environment that is conducive to both physical and spiritual health.
